

Challenges of individual responsibility in (addicted) gambling: a philosophical analysis

Susanne Uusitalo, PhD

Philosophy, University of Turku, Finland

Lisbon Addictions 2019 October 23, 2019, Lisbon, Portugal

TURUN
YLIOPISTO

Statement of conflict of interest

- ▶ None declared.

Outline

- ▶ Background: Responsible gambling/gaming and the control condition of individual responsibility
- ▶ The traditional view of individual responsibility
- ▶
- ▶ The nature of gambling
- ▶
- ▶ The challenge of having a meaningful conception of responsible agency
 - ▶ For the purpose of distinguishing problem gambling from gambling
- ▶ A suggestion for a more relational view of controlled agency in gambling

Responsible gambling/gaming prevention and treatment carried out by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health, with a total of 2.5 million euros a year in accordance with the Lotteries Act.

This is how players can control their gaming

- With Veikkaus games, players can impose limits in terms of euros and time, together with self-bans, on their gaming.
- Players can impose a self-ban on their gaming, covering all digital gaming at once, and they can separately impose a self-ban on their entry to the Casino and the game arcades.
- Players can follow their gaming history at the Game Account Statement page.

Reliable games

Veikkaus' customers can trust that the games are of high quality and reliably run. We treat our customers equally and we take good care of their data and funds.

The traditional idea of individual responsibility

The nature of gambling and individual agency

- ▶ Gambling by default challenges the conception of controlled action:
 - ▶ Game of chance (intentions and outcomes)
 - ▶ States of dissociation (flow and zone)
- ▶ Distinction between (professional/recreational) gambling and problem gambling not visible in this way: both "fail" the ideals of self-controlled, i.e. responsible action.
- ▶ Problem gamblers should not be seen as having "faulty agency" in this respect.
- ▶ By shifting the focus exclusively from the player's competence to a contextualised view of their agency, we avoid the simplistic control-no control evaluation of the players.

Rethinking the agent in control

- ▶ The agency should be seen relational in the sense that the circumstances of gambling are also constitutive of agency, not merely threats or boost for the individuals' competence and control.
- ▶ The motivation, purpose, for playing and continuing playing should be contextualized in the sense that for instance the machines play into the these.
- ▶ Also the societal conceptions of agency, economic stability and meaningful (and appropriate) conduct of life play into the agency of all of us.
 - ▶ Stigma as an aspect affecting the individual agency that is beyond any individual's control.

Concluding remarks

- ▶ The current conceptions of individual (self-)control over one's actions may be overrated on the conceptual level.
- ▶ Further, this kind of control may be impossible to gain in any kind of gambling.
- ▶ Change in conception of responsible agency is called for
 - ▶ From control-centred to context-relational (the machines, societal setting etc.)
- ▶ Even if more work on understanding the nature of gambling is needed for the reconciliation of competence and situational challenges in gambling, accommodating a feasible notion of (self-)control in any kind of machine gambling, enables more realistic responsibility ascriptions and expectations in the phenomenon.

Thank you!

For future comments, please contact susuus@utu.fi